THE MONEY PSYCHOLOGY most models never think about

WHAT'S HAPPENING BEHIND EVERY SPENDING DECISION

> A viewer doesn't just ask "do I want this?" In a split second, and mostly without noticing, they're running a whole checklist.

THE NINE SILENT QUESTIONS

THE QUESTION IN THEIR HEAD	WHAT ACTUALLY ANSWERS IT
Is this worth the price?	What it's sitting next to on your menu — not the number alone.
Is this a good deal?	A comparison point. Without one, there's no "deal," only a cost.
What exactly do I get?	Specificity. Vague offers feel risky; specific ones feel safe.
What happens if I wait?	Whether there's a real reason this moment matters (a goal, an event, a limit).
What are my choices?	How many options, how they're grouped, and which one looks recommended.
Does this feel exclusive?	Whether the offer is for everyone, or for people who've shown up.
Am I already invested?	Whether they've voted, chosen, tipped or chatted before being asked to spend.
Does spending here feel good?	How visibly and specifically the action is acknowledged and rewarded.
What does the next level get me?	Whether there's a clear, appealing step up — or a dead end.

Every chapter in this guide is really about answering one or more of these questions better than the room next door.

TRY THIS

The nine-question audit. Open your current tip menu and ask each question as if you were a first-time viewer. Wherever the honest answer is "I can't tell," you've found a leak. Most menus fail at least three — usually "is this a good deal?", "what are my choices?" and "what does the next level get me?"

THE anchor PRICE TRICK

ANCHORING • CONTRAST • PERCEIVED VALUE

The first number someone sees becomes the ruler they measure everything else against. That's anchoring — and your menu is full of anchors whether you chose them or not.

1 · THE TECHNIQUE

Place a legitimately premium option at the top (or first) of a group so the options below it are judged against it, not against zero.

2 · WHY IT WORKS

When people are unsure what something is worth, they lean on the nearest reference number and adjust from there — usually not far enough. A high, credible option makes mid-range prices feel moderate.

ESTABLISHED

3 · IN YOUR ROOM

Before: Song request 50 / Dance 100

After: Song request 50 / Dance 100 / 10-min themed dance set, your song picks 400

The 100 dance now reads as the easy yes.

4 · TEST IT

Run 4–6 shows with your normal menu, then 4–6 with one real premium anchor added. Compare how often the middle item sells — not the anchor.

THE TEXTBOOK EXAMPLE

WITHOUT AN ANCHOR

$20 — Option A

$30 — Option B

B is "50% more than A." It feels like an upcharge.

WITH AN ANCHOR

$20 — Basic

$35 — Popular

$60 — VIP

$35 now sits comfortably below $60. It feels like the sensible choice.

REAL TALK

The anchor must be real. If your top tier is a joke price for something you'd never deliver, viewers notice — and it quietly makes your whole menu feel less trustworthy. The anchor works best when a few people genuinely buy it.

THE decoy: MAKE THE OTHER OPTION LOOK BETTER

DECOY EFFECT • RELATIVE VALUE • CHOICE ARCHITECTURE

> Sometimes the most useful option on your menu is the one almost nobody buys. Its job is to make a nearby option look obviously smart.

1 · THE TECHNIQUE

Add a legitimate option that is similar to your target option but clearly weaker value. It makes the target look like the obvious pick.

2 · WHY IT WORKS

When two options are hard to compare, people struggle. Add a third that is easy to compare with one of them — and clearly worse — and that one suddenly "wins." Researchers call it the decoy or asymmetric dominance effect. ESTABLISHED (effect size varies)

3 · IN YOUR ROOM

Target: the 10-min show. Add a 5-min version priced close to it. Now 10 minutes for only a little more feels like a no-brainer.

4 · TEST IT

Track the % of buyers choosing your target option before and after adding the decoy. That percentage — not total sales — is the result.

A THREE-OPTION MENU, TAKEN APART

VERSION	OPTION A	OPTION B	OPTION C	WHAT HAPPENS
Original	20 — 5 min	25 — 7 min	45 — 15 min	A and B are nearly identical. C is a big jump. Choice is muddy.
Decoy on B	20 — 5 min	40 — 8 min	45 — 15 min	B is now the decoy: C is almost double the time for 5 more. C looks like the smart buy.
Decoy on C	20 — 5 min	30 — 10 min	45 — 11 min + no extras	C barely beats B. B looks like the clear value.

WHY IT WORKS

Relative value beats absolute price in many decisions because people rarely know what something "should" cost. They look for the option that is clearly better than its neighbor. You're not tricking anyone — every option is real and deliverable. You're making the comparison easy.

TIERED PRICING THAT climbs

ANCHORING • PERCEIVED VALUE • COMMITMENT ESCALATION • FRICTION

> A single price asks "yes or no?" Tiers ask "which one?" — a much easier question, and one where "no" isn't the default.

THE THREE-TIER MODEL

ENTRY
60 tk
- Quick, low-risk
- Great first tip

POPULAR — MOST CHOSEN*
150 tk
- The one you want chosen
- Best value per token

VIP
400 tk
- Personalized, longer
- Real anchor, real buyers

*Only label it "most chosen" if it genuinely is. Chapter 10 shows how to find out.

THE FOUR-TIER MODEL

QUICK
30 tk
- Instant reaction

STANDARD
100 tk
- Short action / request

PREMIUM — BEST VALUE
250 tk
- Longer, your choice

VIP
600 tk
- Custom, personal

WHY IT WORKS ESTABLISHED PRINCIPLE

Tiers stack several principles: the top tier anchors, the middle benefits from contrast (the "compromise" choice — people often avoid extremes), and the low tier reduces friction for people who want in but aren't ready to spend big. Four tiers work best when your audience has a wide spread of spenders; three is easier to read.

NAMING YOUR TIERS

STYLE	ENTRY	MIDDLE	TOP	FITS A ROOM THAT'S…
Classic	Basic	Popular	VIP	Straightforward, broad audience
Luxe	Taste	Signature	Private Reserve	Glam, premium, editorial
Playful	Tease	Treat	Spoil Me	Fun, flirty, game-heavy
Fan club	Insider	Inner Circle	Front Row	Community and regulars

Names should signal what changes as you go up. Keep them short enough to read on a phone.

THE "almost there" EFFECT

GOAL-GRADIENT • VISIBLE PROGRESS • COMPLETION

People work harder — and spend more readily — the closer they are to a goal. Your job is to make progress visible and make "almost there" happen more often.

1 • THE TECHNIQUE

Turn any ask into a visible goal with progress, and design goals so they spend more time in the "almost there" zone.

2 • WHY IT WORKS

The goal-gradient effect: motivation increases as people get closer to a finish line. A well-known coffee-card study found customers bought faster as they approached a free drink — and a card that started with 2 of 12 stamps already filled was completed faster than a 10-stamp card starting at zero.

ESTABLISHED

3 • IN YOUR ROOM

Instead of "tip me 50," show:

35 / 50 — next 15 unlocks the dance

4 • TEST IT

Run shows with one big goal vs. the same total split into 3 stages. Compare how often goals complete and total tokens toward goals per hour.

WHY "35 / 50" BEATS "TIP ME 50"

"TIP ME 50"

Asks one person to carry the whole thing. The finish line is far. There's no sign anyone else cares.

"35 / 50"

Shows others already invested (social proof). The remaining 15 feels small. Finishing it feels like completing something — not just paying.

GOAL WORDING THAT PULLS

you: we're at 320 / 400 on the dance goal 💃 80 to go (progress + remaining amount — makes the gap feel small)

you: whoever takes us past 400 picks the song
(a small, specific reward for finishing — not just for paying) you: GOAL! thank you [name], [name] & [name] — song pick goes to [name] 👑 (credit the contributors, spotlight the finisher, then deliver)

THE THINGS MOST MODELS don't think about

22 OVERLOOKED MONETIZATION DETAILS

These are the small, unglamorous details that tend to separate rooms that feel "lucky" from rooms that are simply well built.

01 · THE FIRST ITEM IS A FILTER

The first thing on your menu tells viewers what kind of room this is. If it's your cheapest reaction, you've said "easy to join." If it's a big private, you've said "serious spenders only." Decide which message you want.

DO THIS → Put your on-ramp item first on the menu for a week and count first-time tippers.

02 · NAMES CHANGE VALUE

"Dance — 150" and "Your-song dance — 150" are the same show. The second tells the viewer what's theirs about it. Rename before you reprice.

DO THIS → Rename your top 3 items to say what's personal about them.

03 · THE DEAD-END MENU

If your most popular item has nothing above it in its group, every happy buyer hits a wall. Put a natural "more of this" option right above your best seller.

DO THIS → Find your best seller. Add one legit "more of this" option directly above it.

04 · THE TIP THAT GETS NO ANSWER

A tip with a slow or generic response teaches that viewer that tipping here doesn't do much. Speed and specificity of acknowledgment are part of your price.

DO THIS → Aim to acknowledge every tip by name within a few seconds, with what it did.

05 · SAME NUMBER, DIFFERENT GROUP

A 100 tk item in your "quick" group looks expensive; the same item in your "shows" group looks cheap. Where an item lives changes how its price reads.

DO THIS → Move one mid-priced item into a pricier group and watch its sales.

06 · RITUALS BEAT REMINDERS

A recurring thing that happens at the same time every show ("10pm song vote") creates a reason to be there at 10pm. Reminders ask; rituals invite.

DO THIS → Pick one ritual and do it at the same time every show for 2 weeks.

CHEAT SHEET

PRICING & tipping RULES

10 PRICING RULES

01 Know your payout per token before setting any price.

02 Every group needs an entry, a target and an anchor.

03 Decide which option you want chosen before you build.

04 The anchor must be real and deliverable.

05 List premium groups high-to-low.

06 Add value before you ever cut price.

07 Price customs for your time, then cap them.

08 Make each tier "more of something" nameable.

09 Change one price at a time, then measure.

10 Underpriced can read as low quality.

10 TIPPING PSYCHOLOGY RULES

01 The first tip is the hardest — make it tiny and fun.

02 Acknowledge fast, specifically, by name.

03 Show what their tip did.

04 Bridge to a related next step, not a random ask.

05 Visible progress beats "tip me."

06 Let viewers choose before you ask them to pay.

07 Credit voters and finishers publicly.

08 Personal offers beat generic ones for regulars.

09 Honor every poll and every deadline.

10 If they say no, let it go warmly.

ANCHOR
Show a real premium option first so the middle feels moderate.

DECOY
Put a close-but-weaker option next to the one you want chosen.

TIER
Entry → target → VIP, each "more of something."

ENTRY • POPULAR • VIP

Build one group at a time. Decide your target option first, then build the anchor and the entry around it.

GROUP 1: _____ TARGET OPTION: _____

TIER	NAME	WHAT'S INCLUDED	PRICE (TK)
Entry
Popular / target
VIP / anchor

GROUP 2: _____ TARGET OPTION: _____

TIER	NAME	WHAT'S INCLUDED	PRICE (TK)
Entry
Popular / target
VIP / anchor

GROUP 3: _____ TARGET OPTION: _____

TIER	NAME	WHAT'S INCLUDED	PRICE (TK)
Entry
Popular / target
VIP / anchor

GUT CHECK

- [ ] Each tier is "more of something" the viewer can name
- [ ] The VIP tier is real, and I'd happily deliver it
- [ ] Gaps between tiers are deliberate (see Ch. 4)
- [ ] Any "popular" tag is based on real data
